

This weekend, on top of everything else going on in Birmingham, AL, you may notice a collection  of vintage British-made cars cruising the streets near the Cracker Barrel at the Colonnade off of I-459. The spectacle will be the British Reliability Run and it will be starting at 8 a.m., going on a 2-day driving tour around the Southeastern U.S. We'll let you check out Chris Tutor's post over on AL.com's Engine Block blog for more details. According to the post, he'll be updating the blog several times on Saturday, so you may want to check it out and see how they're doing. They want photos too if you get them, (hell, so do we  - photos@bhamterminal.com, our Flickr group or the Magic City Flickr Group).

You'll also want to consider giving to their charity, Magic Moments.
