

Coming on the heels of last week's YP Expo, there are two events going on in Birmingham's city center this evening that are both demonstrating the interest and power of this ever emerging group of future leaders:

The YP Birmingham event is described in this Timetable post and it begins at 6 p.m.

The second event is inFORUM 2007 at the Birmingham Museum of Art. That event begins at 5 p.m., so you can actually do both this evening if you wanted. This event is the first ever celebration of boards and agency service, and introduction to civic participation for young citizens. The city is making an effort to encourage those under 30 to take a look at applying to the agencies as it was recently discovered that the group was severely underrepresented on these boards and agencies. It is an excellent way to demonstrate the unspoken message from last week's event; that the current group of YPs are ready for their place at the table.
