

We're aware that many of you will be watching the Inauguration from your home or from Boutwell Auditorium on January 20. Yours truly will actually be in the Nation's Capital for the event (along with an estimated 2 million others) attempting to write for both The Terminal and my personal blog. For those of you joining me in traveling up there, a couple of notes. First of all, the folks at The Washington Post have provided this cool map showing where you can't go with a car from 4 a.m. until 7 p.m. on January 20.

Check out The Post's Inauguration Central for help with questions and info and look for me here on the Monday morning and over here by mid-afternoon on Tuesday.
