

One of the more active people on Twitter in recent days in Birmingham, AL is City Councilor Johnathan Austin. He's recently started live-tweeting portions of the weekly City Council meetings and has given those following his account a chance to get to hear a little more about upcoming projects than folks have been able to in the past.

That would include a tweet late yesterday that included a link to the proposed "front yard parking ordinance" that is scheduled to go before the council for a vote in the near future.

Check it out and share your thoughts down below. They are after all still looking for public input...