

The Magic City looks more like a winter wonderland this morning than normal after a snowstorm passed through the city yesterday afternoon and evening, leaving the city with a rare 1-2" inches of snow depending on where you were.

Whether at the Railroad Park construction site, the Birmingham Green (shown here) or over the mountain, It looked pretty cool yesterday and it's a safe bet that you thought so too.

A photo gallery's been set up on the site to showcase snowfall images you may want to share from yesterday or today. A few photos have already up too and we're hoping that you'll feel like adding yours to the mix. There will be definitely be some additional photos posted during the day from the site's contributors.

Hopefully you were able to stay safe last night as roads iced over and area officials made the right decision to close most state highways and access to elevated portions of metro Birmingham interstates. Continue to use caution while out there this morning.

Photo: A snowman on the Birmingham Green. acnatta/Flickr