

Today, The Terminal turns Pi (or 3.14). I'd be using the symbol but our font of choice is being finicky. There are so many things going on this evening that my game plan is to head over to The Bottletree by 4 p.m. (probably sooner) and hang out for a while. Hopefully you've got a moment to stop by and say hello.

On a related topic, there has never been a reader's poll for The Terminal, though it was becoming obvious that we needed to conduct one. Thankfully, the folks at the Reynolds Journalism Institute would like for our readers to participate in this user survey specific to the site. The results submitted by our visitors will be supplied to us and included in an overall study of online local news sites.

I'd ask that you be as honest as humanly possible as it's part of a plan to determine how best to serve the folks traveling along with us and how this site can best serve you. I've got some other thoughts about it and the whole local media ecosystem over on my Birmingham today.
