

The wait to check in at Birmingham-Shuttlesworth International Airport's been a little easier to deal with this week.

It's definitely not because it's seeing a drop off in use; it's actually seen an increase - at least up through October - according to recent reports.

No, this is because those flying out of The Magic City this holiday season are being greeted with the sounds of beautiful music as they enter the terminal. It's part of the airport's Twelve Days of Holiday Music series.

Today "The Connection Band" and Clay Chalkville High School Chamber Choir are scheduled to serenade those starting their journeys from BHM. The performances are being announced on the front page of the airport's website.

It's a nice way to take off on your holiday adventure, especially considering the upcoming changes for the airport. Today's The Birmingham News story talks about some of those plans and the recent sale of $151 million to help start those changes in January.
