

Birmingham's rockabilly export Dan Sartain has landed the fun distinction of having a track off of his latest album, "Dan Sartain Lives" - "Walk Among the Cobras IV" picked as NPR's Song of the Day for December 22.

The accompanying piece refers to Sartain as "an old-fashioned kind of cool" channeling "the raw quality of surf rock." Sartain did an interview with J.R. Taylor for a story in Black & White earlier this year, talking primarily about how much success he's enjoying internationally, perhaps also hinting at what he hopes people actually get from the work he's already put out there.

If you've made it this far down the page, you've got to head over to NPR and take a listen to the track off of what NME considers one of the most underrated albums of the year.

Photo: dan sartain. fishplums/Flickr