

Some who've been online in Birmingham, AL for a while probably remember the Magic City Flickr Group. It still exists (with more than 20,600 photos and 800+ members as of this digital entry) as does The Terminal's Flickr Group, Birmingham Weekly's SEEN pool, and a profile maintained by Weld for Birmingham.

Well there appears to be a new and growing group of individuals who've turned to the popular photo sharing app Instagram to expose themselves and others to images of Alabama's largest city. Instagram Birmingham lives entirely online; its Twitter profile only has 10 followers (& it hasn't said anything... yet), but its brand page on Facebook currently has 80 people sharing what they've been able to capture digitally - with that number only able to go up.

The group connects using the hashtag #instagrambham when sharing their images on Twitter. Local fans of the smartphone app have gathered in person before as well, including back in March as part of the first annual Instagram International Photowalk. Incidentally, our namesake in the UK is preparing to hold one their own on July 26 as part of the next international photowalk that weekend.

Maybe we'll learn some more about how our folks plan on taking part soon?
